this book analyzes the crisis of the idea of human being based on timeless notions in the euroamerican context as seen primarily through literature and cinema it focuses on italy which has been and remains a crossroads for diverse cultural and political currents open to mediterranean cultural influences while remaining within a typically western cultural context the new man defined by corrado alvaro during his trip in russia in 1934 as transitional implies a human being with a fundamental need for change instead of the new man italo calvino in the 1960 preface to his i nostri antenati wrote about the incomplete human being who is always changing always being completed without ever reaching completion and thus always in transition in these pages the author examines the twentieth and twenty first centuries italian metamorphosis of the concept of the human being mirroring closely at every historical turn the contextual demands of the country from brignone s film sotto la croce del sud 1938 and its faulted biracial protagonists to the netflix series summertime 2020 characterized by the intentional lack of problematization of a multicultural society from the fascist manhood represented by roberto rossellini s aviator modern knight of our time 1942 to fellini s marcello who chooses to not choose 1959 from marinetti s idea of the woman who belonged to the race s development 1919 to mazzacurati s mara who wishes to live thirteen different lives 2007 from primo levi s non humans and stripped men to not belonging to arendt s stateless persons to migrants crossing the desert and the mediterranean sea in segre s and rosi s movies 2008 2016 the journey chronicled in these pages is a surprising one as today s italy is very different than that imagined toward the second half of the nineteenth century
