this open access book is an integrated historical and philosophical investigation of several problematic situations that emerge from diverse areas of medical practice these include but are not limited to paying less attention to patients who are suffering with symptoms because no identifiable pathological lesion or pathophysiological process can be found paying too much attention to patients who are not suffering with symptoms because pathological lesions or pathophysiological processes have been found the tendency to understand patients at risk of developing pathology as being diseased the tendency to disregard the importance of wider societal consequences of definitions of disease and health the book shows that many of these problems are related to what disease and health are considered to be and argues that these problems can be addressed by reconsidering the concepts of health and disease employed in practice it argues for a pragmatic reconceptualization of health and disease that allows clinicians researchers and lay people to understand health and disease in many ways depending on the specific context in which they find themselves and the problems they are trying to solve in doing so authors are careful to show how this pragmatism does not endorse silly forms of relativism in which knowledge is reduced to belief or to whatever people find expedient to believe this work is relevant for philosophers and historians as well as for doctors health policy makers and other health professionals because it addresses problems sourced from medical practice albeit using philosophical and historical methods

a pragmatic approach to agency in group activity builds towards an action theory that explains how new forms agency develop in group activity the approach starts from practical insights about group activity and develops a new understanding of agency from there this study shows how practical interactions and structures in group activity disrupt individual agency it is concluded that important features of agency can be realized on a group level different types of group activities are analyzed in order to better understand these mechanisms and consequently revisit our understanding of agency it is argued that intentionality the key concept in individual action theory merely serves as a pseudo explanatory connection between specific features of agency and their realization in humans this is contrasted with empirical research showing that how humans act is far from the idealized concept of intentionality consequently intentionality as a key explanatory concept is rejected and replaced by a diverse set of features of agency for a similarly diverse set of kinds of agency in this view groups display new forms agency beyond individual agency without making the groups agents themselves such is the nature of group agency
